The Cyrus the Great Institute (CGI) takes pride in having participated in the Munich Convergence Summit, a historic gathering of pro-democracy organizations committed to the liberation of Iran. This summit marked a significant step toward greater coordination among modern and democratic forces, united by the common objectives of reclaiming Iran's national sovereignty, safeguarding its territorial integrity, preserving national unity, establishing a secular democracy, and protecting the country's historical and cultural identity.

The participating organizations and institutions at the summit emphasized the necessity of unity for Iran's liberation and, in an official declaration, recognized Crown Prince Reza Pahlavi as the leader of the movement to reclaim Iran, the national revolution, and the transitional period until the people can determine the country's future through free elections. Additionally, the Lion and Sun flag was reaffirmed as the symbol of Iranian national unity, under which the struggle for freedom will continue.

The Cyrus the Great Institute, which operates in the fields of education, national security, and the preservation of Iran's cultural heritage, fully supports this coordinated effort and stands ready to contribute its academic and research expertise toward shaping Iran's democratic future. We firmly believe that this collaboration is only the beginning of a much larger endeavor, and we call upon all organizations and individuals who were not present at the summit yet share these noble aspirations to join this collective effort.

The Cyrus the Great Institute also expresses its highest regard for Crown Prince Reza Pahlavi, acknowledging his tireless dedication and principled, compassionate leadership in uniting the Iranian nation. His unwavering commitment to democracy and secularism echoes the aspirations of millions of Iranians who strive and fight for a free and prosperous future.

We urge all Iranians, scholars, and public figures—both in civil society and the academic sphere—to stand against divisive tactics and remain steadfast in reinforcing this unity. Now is the time for action, and the Cyrus the Great Institute will continue its mission of raising awareness, empowering individuals, and supporting Iran's transition to a democratic and progressive system.
